[redacted] reported that the Ambassador and others in Embassy Santiago were growing ever more concerned over the elections in Chile; they felt that Alessandri had peaked and that Allende was coming along fast. The Chileans were refusing to grasp the threat of a UP government; even the Chilean military was unconcerned. [redacted] reported also that there was some feeling in the Embassy, apparently fully shared by the Ambassador, that if by the middle of May it looked as if Allende might maneuver a victory, we would be well advised to move into a posture of all-out support for Alessandri.
